This Command Paper contains the Government's responses to (HCP 540-I, session 2005-06, ISBN 0215026683). The current laws on corporate manslaughter link a company's guilt to the gross negligence of a person senior enough to embody the organization. The Government view is that this fails to reflect the complexity of modern corporate life, and that the law needs reforming. A draft Corporate Manslaughter Bill was published 23 March 2005 (Cm. 6497, ISBN 010164972X). The Bill, in theory, should make it easier to prosecute companies and other organizations where gross negligence leads to death, and replace the need to find a "directing mind", a key difficulty with past prosecutions. It would also lift Crown immunity to prosecution for the first time. Over fifteen chapters, the Government sets out its' replies to the Home Affairs and Work and Pensions Committees' recommendations.
